FOREWORD

The primary purpose of a GUIDE TO GENEALOGICAL AND HISTORICAL RESEARCH IN PENNSYLVANIA is to provide researchers, library personnel and individuals with a bibliography of writings available for use in the field of genealogy.

This publication also offers suggestions in searching for family data and is the result of collecting over a thirty year period, copies of all known publications containing information on families residing in the famous Juniata Valley of Pennsylvania, the Susquehanna Valley and all of Central Pennsylvania.

To further increase the value of a publication of this nature, a description of the contents of each book or manuscript as to families, events and localities is included, fully indexed for easy reference.

This bibliography is not complete as some scarce items have been unattainable while others were not considered sufficiently important to include.

Numerous requests for genealogical assistance have been received by the writer over the years. In many instances, the inquiries could not be satisfactory answered due to the large number of items to be examined and the fact that time was not available. Some important publications were not indexed and were necessarily omitted from the search. The need for a general index to the contents of such items was evident. The compiling of the material for this publication has required the writer's spare time during the past two years but it is expected to be valuable as a time saver in the future.

Many of the items listed herein are scarce and cannot be offered for sale as they could not be replaced. All items are available for rent upon deposit of the quoted price and if returned within thirty days the amount deposited less twenty percent will be refunded.

Duplicate copies of some items are available. If not, a search can be made for a copy.

CONCERNING GENEALOGY

WHY

There are many reasons why one should be interested in genealogy. The most important of these is given in the Fifth Commandment as recorded by the prophet Moses, "Honour thy father and thy mother: that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

Other reasons for knowing the genealogy of your family include:

- I. To take pride in the accomplishments of one's ancestors and in one's immediate family.
- II. To know the kinship with others of the same family name and families into which female relatives married.
- III. To promote family reunions.
- IV. To determine legal heirs to estates.
- V. To acquire a hobby as an outlet of one's energies especially by a retired person or any other who has time to spare.
- VI. To join patriotic and other organizations whose membership qualifications are based on residence of ancestors, their nationality, or their military services.
- VII. To leave a record of the past as a guide to future generations.
- VIII. To experience the satisfaction of being able to penetrate the past, to pierce the obscurity curtain, to solve a problem or riddle, or to meet and conquer a challenge.

HE WHO CARETH NOT WHENCE HE CAME,
CARETH NOT WHITHER HE GOETH.

CONCERNING GENEALOGY

HOW

To engage in genealogical research, one should begin at home by examining Bibles and other family records, such as old letters, photographs, diaries, account books, heirlooms, etc.

Such information as is readily available should be recorded on forms or charts which can be purchased from genealogical societies or from researchers. These forms include ancestral charts on which are recorded as found the names of all ancestors, dates of birth, marriage and death, and places of residence. Individual record forms are available which show the details as relating to dates; places of residence of the ancestor; names of parents, brothers and sisters, children and whom they married; places of burial and membership in organizations. A genealogical chart shows the children and grandchildren of an ancestor with dates of birth, death and marriage. The above described records show at a glance what information is lacking and the spaces can be filled in as the information is secured.

The usual procedure is to develop your ancestral chart by starting with one's self and then, step by step, determining similar data for each ancestor. Each person has four grandparents, eight great-grandparents, and so on to an untold number of pro genitors.

Important information and leads can be secured from relatives, especially from those who are also interested in records of their ancestors. All families have some one who is known as the family historian and who can be of assistance. It is best to verify all leads from official records as often the memory fades and confuses the search.

Where it is a well known fact that an ancestor performed a service to his country in times of war or that his identity was otherwise established, it is possible to start with that particular ancestor and develop descent to one's self.

Ancestry hunting will give greater enjoyment and pleasure if it is done by a member of the family rather than by a third disinterested party. There will be some expense involved in either method, but there is much more satisfaction in finding the answers and learning first hand to know one's ancestors through perusing the printed records.

Certified or photostatic copies of important documents should be obtained as often they need to be reexamined for confirmation or for additional information. Other less important records should be carefully copied as the search might terminate in the publication of a family genealogy and all data must be accurate.

There are today several methods of publishing genealogical and historical records, some of them, such as mimeographing and multigraphing, are inexpensive. A publication of one's family records would be a priceless heritage to leave to posterity; it would involve less expense and be more lasting than a granite monument.

WHO

All genealogical research centers around the question of who were one's forefathers. Even if the name is known, one still desires to know who they married, who were the parents and who were the children. The same questions must be answered for each generation.

There is no rule to follow in the spelling of a family name. Throughout the two hundred years since the early migration to the Colonies almost all family names have undergone changes in the spelling. Records of the same period might show several different way of spelling the same name.

This change in spelling may have been due to an effort to "Americanize" or to "Localize". Often when a family moved into a locality where an established family had a name similar in sound, the spellings became identical. Branches of the same family often adopted different spellings in order to distinguish them from all others.

In searching for records in one's ancestors, all possible ways of spelling the family name must be considered. Members of each family are best acquainted with the variations. In general, one should try substituting vowels for each other, double-letters; dropping a letter; interchanging G,C, and K for the first letter, or U,W and O; adding Mc, Mac or O, or dropping these; and in many other ways too numerous to mention.

WHEN

The period of time during which one's ancestors lived is of great importance as in all probability they participated in the stirring events of their times, now well recorded in history books.

The events of their days may have been their arrival at a Colonial Port, participation in the French and Indian Wars, the Revolutionary War, or migration to the south or the west. Good detailed records are available for the majority of those who participated in the various wars. Of special importance to us at present is the approaching observance of the centennial anniversary of the Civil War and in searching for records one should ascertain whether the ancestor was a Civil War soldier. The extent of this has brought a large percentage of the male residents of military age into the conflict and excellent records showing when they were born, married and died are available from state and national sources.

The number of years between generations is generally considered to be from thirty-five, between father and son from twenty to sixty and between mother and children between sixteen to forty-five. These factors must be taken into consideration when attempting to determine the period of time between generations.

The locality in which an ancestor resided must be determined in order to know what records to examine for more detailed information. Various publications such as the first census and the Pennsylvania Archives are indexed and indicate the county and township where families resided.

The early settlers were land hungry and were constantly seeking better and cheaper land, selling their improvements and buying larger tracts of land in new localities. The descendants bought up new land, moving ever westward, thereby losing all contact with other members of their families and in many cases never seeing them again.

The county and township boundaries were constantly changing as new counties were formed and townships divided. To say that an ancestor resided in a certain county at a certain period would often be misleading as later that locality would no longer be in the same county but could be in a distant county and far from the present boundaries of the original county.

The townships underwent a more extensive transformation. Some passed out of existence entirely, others were reduced in size by the formation of several new townships, while others were absorbed by the formation of boroughs and cities.

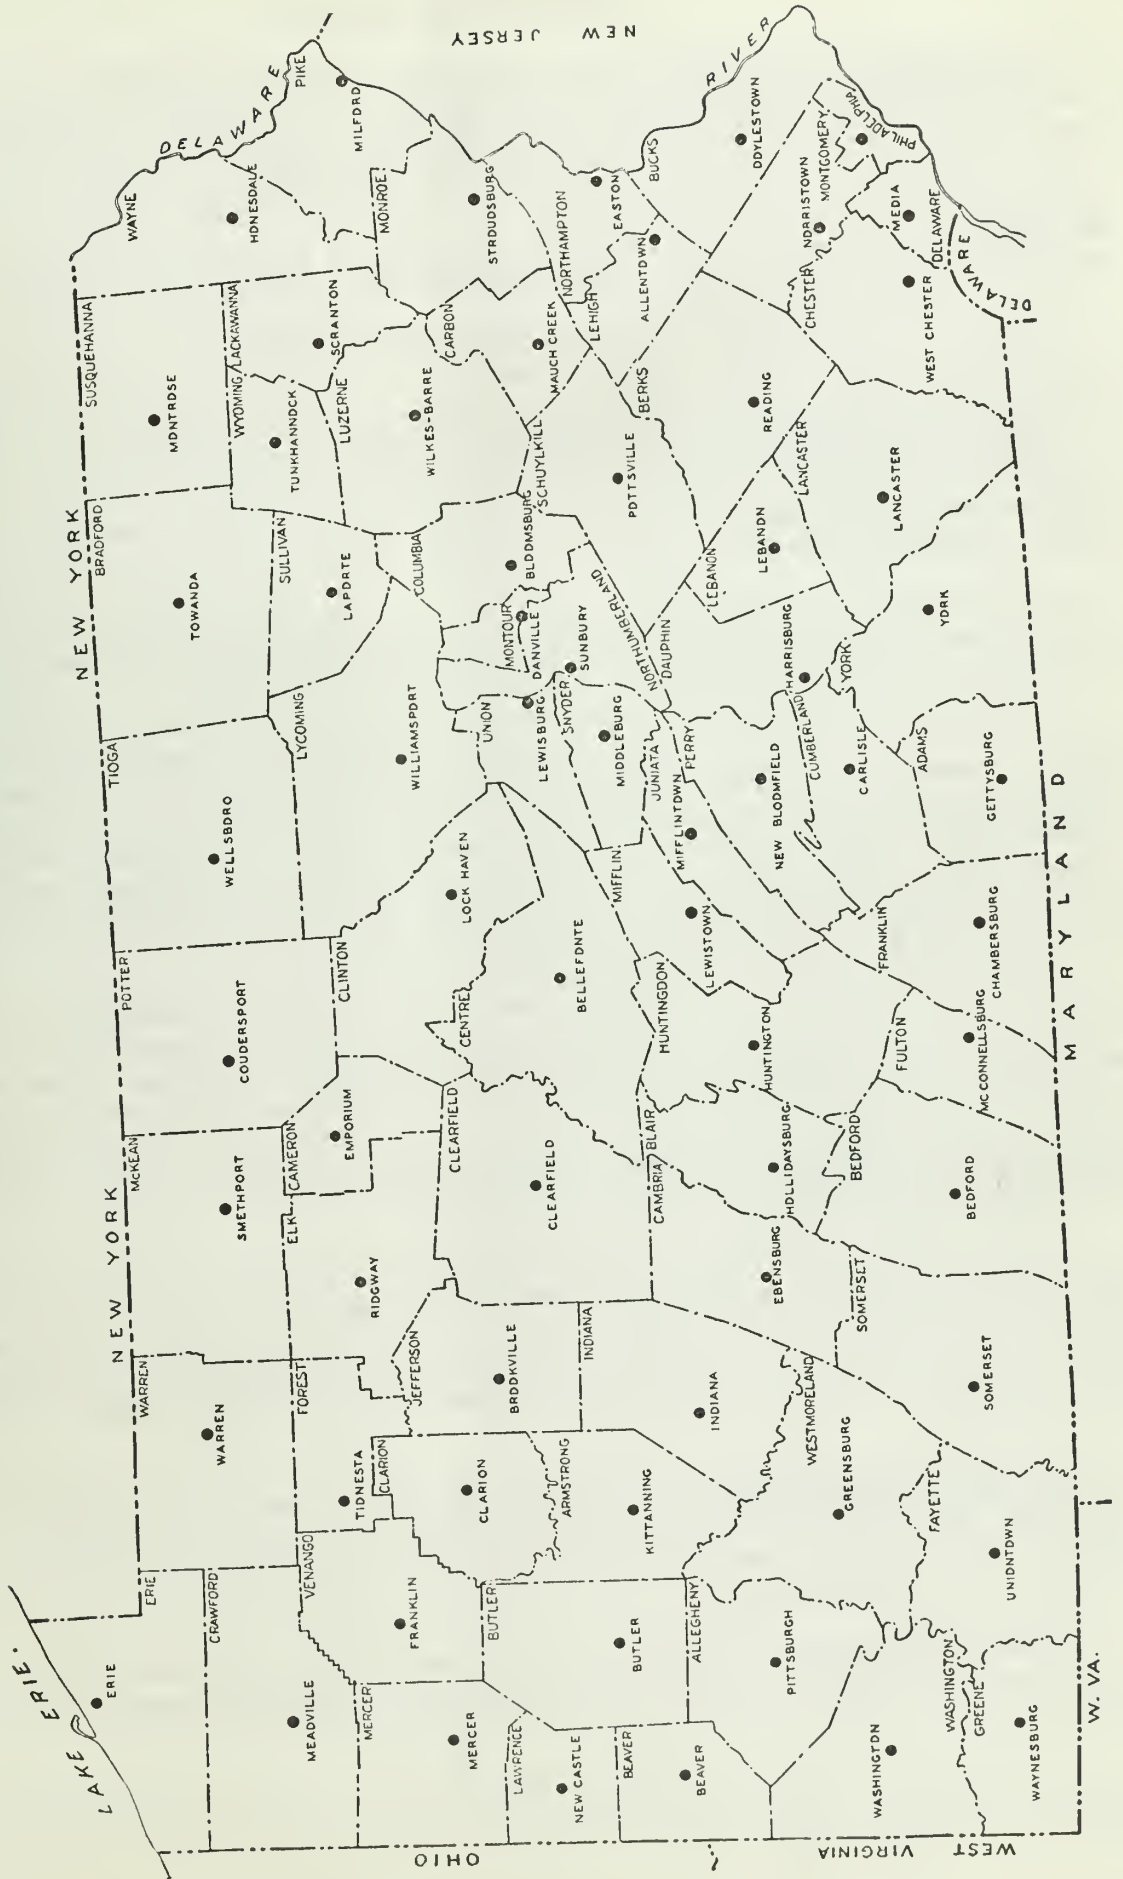

EVOLUTION OF COUNTIES

The following list contains the evolution of the various counties in Pennsylvania and shows the counties in alphabetical order, the year formed, the county or counties formed from, and the name of the county seat:

SOURCES OF INFORMATION

I. ASSESSMENTS: The names of the residents, their status and possessions, as submitted to the County Commissioners annually by the district assessors, are the most authentic and most extensive records made; yet, they are the least preserved and consulted in the search for information pertaining to early ancestors. They were made for the purpose of securing taxes for use in the operation of the local government and include all male inhabitants above the age of twenty-one, whether owning property or having an occupation.

These can well be called the RECORDS OF LAST RESORT as they contain proof of residence another important data that is found nowhere else. However, they are not always preserved, occasionally they have been destroyed by fire or discarded as they require considerable space. If preserved they are usually located in inaccessible places as they are seldom referred to. They were written in free hand, sometimes hardly legible now, on paper that is brittle and stained with dust and moisture.

Some of the assessment records for the years between 1765 and 1791 were removed from the County Commissioners' Offices to the state capitol and published in the Third Series of the Pennsylvania Archives.

The information found in the assessments varied from time to time but always listed the residents by districts, their ownership of real estate, their occupations, their valuations and amount of tax to be collected. At various times, the ownership of horses, cattle, sheep, carriages, watches, bonds, stock, stills, and slaves was shown. Military draft lists of persons between the ages of 21 and 45 or 50 were prepared, as well as names and ages of children of poor families who were unable to pay the tax.

Notations found on the assessment records often showed transfers of land or names were marked off by writing "gone", "deceased", "moved", etc. The assessments were usually made in the fall of the year previous to the year for which the tax would apply so that a name appearing for the first time, as a single freeman would be an indication of his becoming of age during that year, likewise being dropped as a single freeman and appearing on the general list would indicate approximate year of marriage.

The omitting of a name in one district and its appearance in another district for the same or subsequent year can be an aid in identifying the names as the same person. Changes in the boundaries of counties and townships must be kept in mind. The assessing of persons by the same family name will often indicate the relationship between them especially when junior or senior is affixed

II. BAPTISMAL CERTIFICATES: Prior to the year 1893, the only record of births, other than entries in the Family Bibles, was the baptismal certificates prepared by the pastor or other church official and presented to the parents or to the person baptised.

The event was usually entered in the church books. Occasionally the record was retained by the pastor when the baptism was performed in the home or when the pastor had more than one charge.

The certificate stated the individual's name, the name of the parents, the date baptised and was signed by the pastor. Usually such certificates stated the date of birth, names of the sponsors and sometimes their relationship to the one baptised; whether the sponsors were the parents, friends, relative or the grandparents. Baptismal certificates are a proof of parentage and when the date of birth is included it discloses an important item in the search to complete an ancestral chart.

Church records of baptisms have been published in some cases while others, as well as the pastor's records, have been deposited with various church historical societies where they can be examined or where data can be secured.

III. BIBLES: The information recorded in family Bibles is the most authentic proof of dates and relationship that can be found, provided that the entries were made at the time. The publication date of the bible will help determine whether the entry was made when the event took place. A Bible printed in 1810 which contained births, deaths and marriages occurring prior to that year would not necessarily be good proof.

The Bible record lists the names of the children in order of their birth with the date of birth and sometimes the hour of arrival. It generally gives the names of the parents, their dates of birth and marriage, whom the children married and their dates of marriages and deaths.

Family Bibles usually remain in the home when the home is continued after the parent's deaths or are inherited by the oldest daughter. The early Bibles were large in size and may be found today stowed away in the attic, or given to the local historical society for safe keeping. Often the family records have been removed. Photostatic or certified copies may have been made for various purposes and in some cases the pages have been removed and submitted as proof in claims for pensions or other benefits.

Often the records in the family Bible were entered in the native language of the owner and an interpreter must be found to translate the entries.

IV. CENSUS: A census was taken by the County Assessors as early as 1783 in which the names of the heads of the families residing in each township were listed with the numbers of acres owned, the number of dwelling houses, and the number of inhabitants in each family, both white and black. The names of non-residents, the number of acres of land owned and the names of single freemen were also shown. These census records of some of the counties are published in the Third Series of the Pennsylvania Archives. Possibly others remain in the offices of the County Commissioners.

An enumeration of the inhabitants of all states was taken by the United States government in the year 1790 and published as HEADS OF FAMILIES with a separate volume for each state. The information was gathered by the United States Marshalls and their assistants who listed the names of heads of families by counties and sometimes by townships, districts, towns, etc. The information also included the number of free white males of 16 years and upwards, including the head of the family; the number of white males under 16 years; the free white females, including wife or head of family; all other free persons, and the number of slaves.

SOURCES OF INFORMATION

Enumerations of the inhabitants were taken for the year 1800 to 1840 in a similar manner except that the age groups varied. The census for these years have not been published but are available for research at Washington.

Beginning with the 1850 United States Census, the names of all members of the household were listed with their ages, occupations and state in which they were born. Information can be secured from the census records for the years 1850 to 1880 from the Census Bureau, Washington, or possibly photostatic or microfilm copies are available in the State Libraries.

V. CHURCHES: Among the most authentic original records in existence are the church records prepared by the pastor or other officials and preserved in the church or in the parsonage. These records include the baptismal, marriage and death events, and usually include the date, names of the parents and places.

The minutes of the church council or session often contain valuable family data including admissions to membership and issuance of removal letters with information as to where the members were from and where they were moving to.

Many churches have at various times published histories of their churches and congregations in order to observe anniversaries and in some instances have included the vital statistics as well as the church minutes. In some instances, the church records have been turned over to a central organization, such as a church historical society where information can be obtained.

Practically all churches, especially during the early days, owned and maintained burial grounds where residents of the community could be buried. The church records usually show the name of the owner of the cemetery lots but not always the names of those buried therein.

Persons residing over a wide area were included in the records as often members of that faith would travel many miles in order to have the event of the baptism, marriage or burial performed at the church where they had religious ties. Marriages were usually performed in the locality of the bride's parents, either at their church or home, while the groom may have traveled a considerable distance.

Pastors who had several charges or who covered certain areas periodically were known as circuit riders and their records were usually retained by them. Some are now being preserved by church and other historical societies, or by descendants, but in many cases were either lost or destroyed.

VI. COLLEGES: All universities, colleges and schools of higher learning maintain records of their alumni and in some cases an alumni association has been incorporated, become an important part of the institutions existence.

Students generally selected schools at a distant town or city as their education was considered more effective when they went away from home to secure their college education. Often they attended the same school that their ancestors or relatives had attended years before.

The school or its alumni associations may have published from time to time a record of its graduates and non-graduates, sometimes with biographical sketches, in order to keep in touch with them after leaving the campus and to point with pride to their achievements. Mailing lists of graduates and non-graduates are maintained for appealing for contributions to endowments, improvements, class reunions and alumni fund drives.

The information preserved on each alumnus may be very complete and include in addition to the full name and class, the date and place of birth, names of parents and their place of residence, dates of admission and graduation, degrees received, membership in fraternities and groups, occupations and professional assignments, when and to whom married, names of children, address, or date and place of death.

VII. COUNTY VITAL STATISTICS: For a period of years the marriages, births and deaths of residents of each county were recorded by the Clerk of the Orphans' Court. These records are being preserved in bound volumes and can be examined in the courthouses. The information found in these records is of great value to those searching for family data.

The first of such records to be recorded were the marriages which date from 1884 when laws were enacted requiring persons to secure marriage licenses. The filing of an application for a marriage license continues in effect to the present time and the most important information pertaining to both the groom and bride includes: full name, color, occupation, birthplace, residence, age, previous marriages, names of parents, maiden name of mother, residence of parents, their occupations and birthplaces, etc.

The person performing the ceremony presents the original certificate of marriage to the newlyweds and returns a duplicate certificate to the county which issued the license where the record of marriage is entered in the marriage dockets; since January 1, 1906, records of marriages are transmitted monthly to the Bureau of Vital Statistics at Harrisburg.

Beginning with the year 1893 and continuing until 1906, a register of births was maintained by counties in the office of the Clerk of Orphans' Court and included the name of the child, sex, color, names of the parents and their residence, occupation of father and dates and place of birth of the child. Since 1906, such records are gathered by local registrars and forwarded to Harrisburg.

During the years 1894 to 1906, the tax assessors reported deaths occurring in their districts to the Clerk of the Orphans' Court who entered such records in a register of deaths. The information included the name of the deceased, color, sex, age, marital status, place of birth, occupation, date and place of death, date and place of interment, and names of parents. Since 1906 death records are gathered by local registrars and forwarded to the Bureau of Vital Statistics at Harrisburg.

SOURCES OF INFORMATION

VIII. DEEDS: The examination of deed books, found in the office of the Recorder of Deeds in each county courthouse, is of great importance in the search for family information. These books constitute a complete record of all conveyances of property within the county from the time it was formed. A title search as instituted by the purchaser, to determine whether the title was good, often recited the chain of ownership to the original deed from William Penn, his heirs or the Commonwealth.

Purchase of land from the Penns or the Commonwealth are recorded in the Land Office, Department of Internal Affairs, Harrisburg, from where information and photostatic copies can be secured which will generally show the locality, give a description of the plot, and name the adjacent land owners. These original titles are known as Warrantees of Land and are published by counties in the Third Series of the Pennsylvania Archives. Fictitious names were sometimes used by the purchaser in order to secure rights to more land than allowed by the law to each person.

The deed books preserved in the county courthouses show the date of transfer, names of grantors and grantees and their places of residence, location and description of property, previous owner or owners, terms and condition of the sale, date recorded, witnesses and the signatures of grantors or their mark when they were unable to write. It is important to examine the signatures, as often they are different than in the body of the deed, being spelled in another manner or the given names spelled out in full.

Two indexes to county deeds are maintained. One for the Grantee and one for the grantor. The grantee index records the names of the purchasers in alphabetical order and are valuable in determining when the family first acquired property in that county which is often the year of their arrival and sometimes the year of marriage.

The grantor index shows the names of those conveying title and the deed included the name of the husband and his spouse as all persons holding rights in the property were required to sign off such rights. In the settlement of an estate the signatures of all heirs were required. Where the purchase of a property is of record and there is no record of its transfer the conveyance may have been by Will or the locality may have been in an area which was included in the formation of a new county.

IX. GENEALOGIES: There are numerous publications in existence which include some data on practically all families but locating a copy of a publication which mentions one's ancestors is difficult. A genealogy is a record of the descendants of one blood strain while an ancestral search is limited to one's self and his ancestors.

Genealogies usually present a rather complete history of the compiler's line but the lateral lines are not included. This may be due to losing all trace of descendants or the failure of members of some branches to cooperate and supply necessary data. Various methods are used to designate the generations such as number I or the letter A for the first emigrant or the beginning ancestor, and subsequent numbers or letters for their descendants. Other arrangements are in use, some difficult to follow. Some genealogies will be found that are not indexed.

SOURCES OF INFORMATION

Whether a genealogy has been published containing data on any family can possibly be ascertained from other members of the family, especially from those who are known as the family historians. Inquiry should be made at libraries or of dealers who specialize in the sale of used books. Most publications are copyrighted and two copies deposited in the Congressional Library at Washington where information can possibly be secured.

There are very very few rental libraries in operation where books can be borrowed. Cumulative indexes showing the family names included in various publications are exceedingly valuable and great time savers, if available. The title of a publication does not always indicate its contents and only through the use of cumulative index can one learn of the existence of a book which contains references to the family in question. It is for this purpose that this publication is being compiled.

X. HISTORIES: At various time some energetic person undertakes the writing of a history of a county, township, town or locality. Such historical efforts when supported by documentary proof become of great value in ancestry hunting, especially when they include detailed information on the residents.

The compiling and publication of a comprehensive history entails a great amount of time and expense. During the period from about 1880 to more recent times, the publication of county histories has been sponsored by printing houses and sold by subscription. The majority of these publications, especially county histories, were limited editions and are now difficult to find.

In these histories, many local historical events which are now beyond the memory of present generations were recorded, most of which do not appear in state-wide publications. Military services and the part in national affairs performed by the local citizenry were usually included as well as the origin and development of local communities.

The county histories are of special value when they include the Indian occupation, military events, early settlers, assessment lists, military rolls, professions, churches, schools, and genealogical or biographical sketches.

XI. MARRIAGE CERTIFICATES:

Prior to the year 1884, marriage certificates were issued by the minister, or other official performing the rites, and presented at the time of marriage to the newlyweds who preserved them in the family bible, had them framed or cared for in some other manner. These certificates are more authentic in proving the event than entries in the church records or the family bible as often the entries were made at a later date and were occasionally misstated, especially as to the date.

A marriage certificate of one hundred years ago varies little from one issued today except that early certificates may have been larger in size and inscribed with flowers and sentimental quotations. The information included the names and places of residence of the groom and bride, the date of marriage and the signatures of witnesses and of the person performing the marriage.

SOURCES OF INFORMATION

The event was usually recorded in registers kept by the officiating person, whether a minister, priest, justice of the peace, alderman, or judge. Since 1884, a certification of the marriage is made to the Clerk of the Orphans' Court of the county issuing the license and since 1906 a record is also made in the Bureau of Vital Statistics at Harrisburg.

XII. MILITARY SERVICES: No group of persons is better described by records than those who performed military services, either during war time or peace. When searching for family data one of the first facts to determine concerning an ancestor or relative is whether he served in the military establishment of the state or nation.

At various times during the past, especially when war threatened or during a crisis, the tax assessors were required to prepare lists of male inhabitants capable of bearing arms. During World War I and the more recent wars, all male inhabitants of certain ages were required to register for the draft.

Of special interest to the researcher is the tax assessor's reports of the muster rolls for the years 1783-1790, by township or districts, of the male inhabitants between the ages of 18 and 53 made subject by law to the performance of military duty. A similar enrollment list by townships was taken by the tax assessors in the year 1864 of males between the ages of 21 and 45 which listed their full names, ages, occupations, marital status, and whether such persons were then in the military service.

Incomplete records showing the names of those who served the Colony, especially during the French and Indian Wars, are listed in the Second series of the Pennsylvania Archives. Some muster rolls include the soldier's age, country in which born and occupation.

Muster rolls of soldiers who performed military services during the Revolution, the War of 1812 and the Mexican War are found in the Pennsylvania Archives, especially the Fifth and Sixth Series. A complete record of Civil War soldiers showing their names by regiment and company is found in Bates' PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS, 5 volumes, which is not indexed.

The department of military Affairs at Harrisburg collects and preserves records pertaining to the soldiers of all wars on a statewide basis, County Directors of Veterans Affairs are appointed by the County Commissioners to collect and preserve records of soldiers of their counties, to provide headstones, flag holders, flags at each Memorial Day, burial allowances for the veteran and his widow, and to maintain if necessary the burial plot. The information acquired in the performance of the above includes the name, serial number, residence, war and branch of service, period of service, rank, dates of birth and death, place of burial, address and relationship of applicant, etc.

The information appearing on soldier's discharge is recorded in a Soldier's Discharge Book maintained in the office of the Recorder of Deeds. The discharge includes services during the various wars and may have been copied in free hand, typed or photostated.

Records of military services are on file in the National Archives at Washington, and are of extreme value in the search for data on the soldier and his family.

XIII. NATURALIZATION: The Provincial Council in 1727 ordered that all persons arriving in the Province of Pennsylvania who were not British Subjects or who were "without any leave obtained from the Crown of Great Britian" should sign a declaration of allegiance and subjection to the King of Great Britain and fidelity to the proprietors of the Province. A record of the Germans who migrated to Pennsylvania through the port of Philadelphia has been published in three volumes covering the years 1727 to 1808 as PENNSYLVANIA GERMAN PIONEERS. Similar publications listing the names or arrivals of other nationalities are available to the researcher.

The first uniform naturalization law passed by Congress in 1790 gave jurisdiction over the naturalization of aliens to the county courts where records are to be found from that year to the present. A declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States is required, giving the alien's full name, place of residence, place of birth, port and date of entry, accompanied by a statement signed by two citizens as to the applicant's having resided in the United States for five years and his being of good moral character. A petition for naturalization was presented to the court at a later date and if approved, the applicant was declared a citizen and issued a certificate.

The comprehensive naturalization law of 1906 provided for uniform processes and records throughout the nation and at the present time, after various amendments and changes, the information required to be furnished by the applicant is rather complete, including photographs and fingerprints. These records continue to be filed in the county Prothonotary's office, however, the granting of citizenship is supervised and approved by the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the United States Department of Justice.

XIV. NEWSPAPERS: The local newspapers, daily or weekly, are considered to be the best medium of recording events when they happen and thereby such records become of great historical value in the search for family data. The rapidity with which their contents are written and printed do not permit the reporters to verify all that they write and legend or hearsay is occasionally included.

The publishers generally preserve files of their papers which can be examined for historical events and records of happenings to families in the vicinity. Files of old newspapers are often found in the care of historical societies or in libraries.

The newspapers are especially valuable in securing information on marriages and deaths. Those published years ago gave only the name, date, age and place of deaths or residents. The marriage reports gave only the names, place, date pastor or official, and possibly the names of the parents.

Some newspapers maintain genealogical sections or columns in which questions and answers are printed. Occasionally feature articles are published on the history of families, soldier, or localities when celebrating an anniversary, which are of great value. The publishers usually possess libraries containing books on local history and of the families residing in their area. Files of more recent events and personages are maintained for ready reference.

SOURCES OF INFORMATION

The deaths of local residents during the past seventy or eighty years were amply recorded whether as news items or in an obituary column and include such information as the full name of the deceased, residence, date and place of death, date and place of birth, names of parents, to whom married, names of survivors, membership in churches and lodges, and other vital information.

XV. ORPHANS' COURT: Petitions and court action involving the settlement of an estate where disputes arise among heirs, or where the executors or administrators fail to perform their prescribed duties, are filed and recorded with the Clerk of the Orphans' Court. The petitions usually state the names of the heirs, their relationship, a description of the estate to be shared and often the date and place of death of the deceased.

Where minors are entitled to share in the estate, the court appoints guardians to care for their financial affairs. The guardian's accounts are recorded showing the name of the ward, the name of the deceased, receipts, disbursements, balance due to the ward, etc.

When auditors are appointed by the court to determine the distribution of an estate, their report becomes valuable in searching for family data as such reports include the names, place of residence, relationship and apportioned amount due each heir.

XVI. PENSIONS: Soldiers of the Revolutionary War were awarded depreciation pay and many received grants of land located in northwestern Pennsylvania. In more recent wars, bonuses were granted in recognition of services, and as an adjustment in pay. In 1883, a list of pensioners on the rolls of the United States government was published which contained the name of each pensioner, the cause for being pensioned, the address by state, county and post-office, the rate of pension per month, the date of original allowance and the number of their pension certificate. This list included widows, mothers and fathers who were entitled to pensions based on a relative's services.

During and subsequent to the Revolutionary War, the widows and dependents of deceased soldiers were granted pensions by the counties from fines collected from inhabitants who failed to perform military services when called. At a later date state pension funds for disabled Revolutionary veterans and their widows were paid by the County Treasurers from State funds in their possession. This arrangement was extended to include those of subsequent wars including the Civil War.

Pensions, disability compensation and retirement pay have been granted by the government to soldiers of all wars at various times, generally upon application and the submission of proof of service. For pensions based on Revolutionary services the applicant was required to submit a statement sworn to before a local judge giving information as to dates and places of his military services, engagements, names of officers and comrades, places of residence, and other personal data. The eligibility for early Revolutionary War pensions was based on length of service and the need for financial aid. These records are available in the National Archives at Washington for examination or data may be obtained upon application.

XVII. STATE VITAL STATISTICS: The Province of Pennsylvania issued marriage licenses to persons residing therein upon receipt of a penal bond from the minister or others performing the ceremony. Civil magistrates were also authorized to issue marriage licenses. A record of the licenses issued by the Provincial Secretary's office between the years 1743 and 1790 is found in the Second Series of the Pennsylvania Archives showing the names of the grooms and brides and the date of the license, not the date of marriage.

Beginning January 1, 1906, the registration of births, deaths and marriages was assumed by the Commonwealth and such records are being collected and preserved by the Bureau of Vital Statistics at Harrisburg where photostatic copies can be secured upon the payment of a fee of one dollar.

The birth records include the name of the child, sex, date and place of birth, name of father and maiden name of the mother. The death records include the date and place of birth of the deceased, sex, color, date and place of death, marital status, residence, name of father, maiden name of mother, cause of death and place of interment.

The marriage licenses are issued by the county Clerk of the Orphans' Court upon application and a copy of the certificate of marriage is supplied to the county by the person performing the ceremony. Since 1906, a record of the marriage is forwarded by the Clerk of the Orphans' Court to the Commonwealth and the information includes the place and date of marriage, name of person performing the ceremony, and the following data pertaining to both the groom and bride; full name, residence, occupation, date and place of birth, color, prior marriages, etc.

XVIII. TOMBSTONES: The information found on tombstones is of great value in the search for family data, comparable with records found in the family Bibles and in vital statistics. The inscriptions usually includes the name, dates of birth and death, or age. Occasionally the family name of the spouse or widow is shown. In the case of children the name or initials of the parents are often shown.

Numerous burial plots exist throughout the land, some of them located on farms or in groves, while many others have disappeared from sight, being located in what are now cultivated fields. A number of cemeteries, small and large are now unowned and uncared for and are fast disappearing due to action of vandals and the forces of nature.

The more progressive churches and cemetery associations provide care of the burial plots, especially where perpetual care is arranged for. These organizations preserve records of the plot owners as well as a record of the burials therein, and occasionally such records including the tombstone inscriptions are published in book form.

The present condition of the tombstones and their inscriptions depend on the type of stone used and the age of the stone. Many native stones were used in the early days and if inscribed they no longer can be read. Occasionally inscriptions are incorrect due to the engraver's mistakes or due to incorrect data being furnished. The latter is especially true when the stones were erected at subsequent dates. Many stones have sunk into the ground, some partially while others entirely.

The inscriptions found on all tombstones in family plots should be copied in full as stones will often show the names of children of whom there are no other records. The initials or full names of the parents are generally given and are valuable in securing data on the previous generation and indicates residence of the parents at the time of the child's death.

There is usually some one in each community who collects and preserves tombstone inscriptions as a hobby and whose records become more valuable with time as the inscriptions become illegible. When tombstones are photographed the inscriptions should be copied in full as the photograph might not develop or produce a readable inscription.

XIX. WILLS: The contents and provisions of a person's will is of great importance in genealogical research as such written instruments contain the names of the survivors who will inherit the estate. Between the date the will was written and the date of death may be a few days, months, or several years. During this period, members of the family may have died so an heir's name appearing in the will may not appear in the distribution.

Wills usually contain the first name of the spouse, the names of the children in order of age, also whom the daughters married. The bequeaths of real estate as mentioned in the will are of importance as real estate in another county of the state might indicate where the family formerly lived or where the heirs later resided. Description of the real estate, previous owners, when purchased, locality and to whom bequeathed, should be noted. The date of purchase usually indicated the year of settlement in that locality. The names of the executors and witnesses often lead to important conclusions.

When a person who possessed property dies without having made a will the Register of Wills grants Letters of Administration to persons authorizing them to settle the estate. Returns are filed showing the assets and liabilities of the estate as well as the distribution which includes the names of the heirs.

Since the year 1874, proof of death giving the date of death is required. Renunciations are filed when any of the executors named in the will decline to serve.

Certified or photostatic copies of wills, letters and returns can be secured from the office of the Register of Wills upon payment of a charge based on the size of the documents. The contents of wills recorded in county courthouses fill many volumes and are seldom published in book form due to their extent, however, the vital information showing names, dates, heirs and their relationship are occasionally published. YOUR FAMILY TREE, a quarterly, published at Indiana, contains important data from wills found in Central Pennsylvania courthouses.

XX. MISCELLANEOUS: There are other sources of information such as the public libraries, genealogical societies, historical societies and individuals. The libraries usually possess a collection of local histories and other publications containing genealogical data of the area in which they are located. The amount of work that can be accomplished is limited through travel time, library hours, time required to search the indexes, to locate and secure the item desired and the inability to use a typewriter. It is far better to use the books at home where more and faster work can be accomplished at convenient hours.

Genealogists and private collectors who have knowledge of the residents in their communities and know the geography of the area are the best means of securing family information if the services of a third person are needed in the search. The name and address of such persons are usually known to librarians and can be secured upon request.

GENEALOGICAL SERVICES

A limited amount of time is available for library search and travel to distant places. A charge of three dollars an hour is established for this service, to include mileage and other travel expense.

The library search will include an examination of extensive card and letter files, the contents of books and manuscripts, data collected over a period of many years, tombstone inscriptions copied in many cemeteries of this area, and other source material. An examination of the contents of the Pennsylvania Archives for family data is of special value.

Travel to distant places will include an examination of records to be found in the various courthouses, libraries, cemeteries, churches, historical societies, newspaper files, etc., located throughout Central Pennsylvania.

Data can also be secured through correspondence with individuals who do research work, or from agencies who will supply photostatic or certified copies of records in their possession.

For a preliminary survey and reply to your inquiry enclose $1.00.

GENEALOGICAL SUPPLIES

A variety of forms for use in ancestral search and compiling genealogy are available from genealogical societies and others. The following listed forms have been devised as suitable for the amateur or beginner who is interested in compiling data on their ancestors.

BOOK OF FORMS 64 pages in loose leaf binder (three ring) 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ x11..... \$2.00

Loose leaf forms for use in developing, recording and preserving ancestral data. Includes an ANCESTRAL CHART for recording names, dates of birth, marriage and death, for 63 ancestors (six generations). Also, 63 INDIVIDUAL RECORD FORMS, one for each ancestor, which can be numbered to correspond to ancestor's number on the chart.

ANCESTRAL CHARTS 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ x11 Printed on two sides..... .04 each Dozen \$.40
Spaces for names, dates of birth, marriage and death, for 63 ancestors, six generations.

INDIVIDUAL RECORD FORMS 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ x11 Printed on two sides..... .04 each Dozen \$.40
Spaces to record detailed information on each ancestor and show sources of information.

GENEALOGICAL CHARTS 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ x11 Printed on one side..... .03 each Dozen \$.30
Spaces for names, dates of birth, marriage and death, for three generations.

EXPLANATION OF BIBLIOGRAPHY AND CONTENTS

The following pages list the most important publications containing genealogy of residents and history of events of Central Pennsylvania. Some additional items containing state-wide records and a few of surrounding states are also included.

These publications are grouped as to type of contents into categories in order to assemble like items and as an aid in describing their contents. Each item is described in detail in the following manner:

A number is assigned as an aid in identifying and in ordering.

A key to contents is selected to describe the contents as to the period covered, historical events, localities, institutions, family names, etc. Often the title does not sufficiently describe the contents, such as, KITH AND KIN, which by the use of a key to contents states the family name whose records are included.

The name of the author, compiler or publisher is given as briefly as possible. All titles, degrees or other identity are omitted in order to condense and conserve space.

The number of pages in each volume is given.

The year published is shown and if the available copy is a reprint it is so stated with the year reprinted.

When the item is published in more than one volume the contents of each volume is stated and a letter is assigned to each.

The size of all volumes is 6" by 9" unless otherwise stated, the width in inches is given first followed by the height in inches.

All publications are bound in cloth or other material on boards unless described as paper, wrappers or loose leaf in binders.

Items are further described as to whether illustrated and indexed.

The prices of all items are shown on the right hand margin and are considered a fair value based on prevailing costs, postage, shipping cartons, wear and tear through handling in transit and during examination.

The description of the contents includes the title as printed on the cover or on the title page and is listed in underscored capital letters. The contents are described in detail, giving the period of time covered, nature of contents, events, families mentioned, etc.

RENTAL SERVICE

The items listed in the bibliography have been selected from an extensive library which has been acquired over a long period of time. In many cases only one copy has been acquired due to such items being scarce, and is therefore offered for rent and is not for sale.

All items are for rent, many for sale, so that when ordering it should be stated whether the copy is wanted on a rental basis or as a purchase. Search for scarce items or others not included in the bibliography will be undertaken.

The conditions of this rental service is that the listed price be remitted as a deposit and upon return in thirty days, the deposit less twenty percent will be refunded. The rental period of thirty days should permit the borrower sufficient time to examine the publication and to copy any information found to be of value. All books listed can be mailed at book rate and it is not necessary that they be insured.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR USE OF THE INDEX

The cumulative index appearing herewith is arranged in alphabetical order and includes three means of describing the listings: lower case letters, capitals and underscored capitals, all of which are followed by numerals that refer to the item numbers assigned to the publications appearing in the bibliography, and not to a page number.

The lower case letters, such as Jones, indicates that data on the Jones family will be found in such publications referred to by the numerals which follow. Where the full name is given, such as Jones, John, the indication is that special data or mention is included concerning John Jones.

The capitals, such as JONES, JOHN, indicates that John Jones is the author or compiler of the publication referred to by the numerals listed after his name. This arrangement permits the searcher to distinguish between references to families and to the author or compiler of the publication, as often an author's family is not mentioned in the contents. It also gives some recognition to the author or compiler and is an aid in determining what contributions to printed records a person has made. This arrangement further enables the searcher to determine whether a certain person's publications are included in the bibliography. The names of firms, such as NATIONAL HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION, appear in a like manner.

The titles to all publications appear in capital letters which are underscored, such as NEWCOMB GENEALOGY or KITH AND KIN, and where more than one name appears in the title such as HUBER-HOOVER GENEALOGY, both names are listed in the index in their alphabetical order.

All place names appearing in the bibliography and the cumulative index are located in Pennsylvania unless otherwise stated. The name Pennsylvania is omitted whenever possible.
